

Are you on LinkedIn? Monitoring the Toastmasters discussions?

If not, you should be. It's a widely-used social networking forum, for largely professional purposes (while Facebook is more friends and social).

There's a very active Toastmasters discussion group on there, there's been hundreds of discussions, some with 20-40 comments on them, over the last few months, ranging from how to do table topics to how to build new clubs. WHQ participates too (mostly Camy McGeath, and also Jennifer Bosco).

Go to <http://www.linkedin.com> and sign up (you can add personal details later if you like. Feel free to search on my name and add me as a "link", and join the Toastmasters discussion group with this URL:

<http://www.linkedin.com/groups?gid=98449>

Even if you just want to read what people are talking about and not participate, you'll find it VERY useful.

See you there!

Mike Raffety, DTM
2008-10 International Director

"Toastmasters: Confidence. Leadership. Service."